THE efforts of the promoters of the Woman's Exchange to continue the good work of that institution are certainly to be commended, and as their pathway has by no means been strewn with financial roses, the philanthropic people of the city ought to see to it that their commendation is expressed in the form of substantial assistance.

HOLDING ISLAND TRADE.

The chartering of a vessel for the shipment of goods direct from San Francisco to Makaweli might at first thought suggest serious consideration as to whether this is the opening wedge of a plan that will result in diverting a considerable portion of the trade of the island of Kauai from Honolulu. The fact that the larger part of the business men who would be instrumental in establishing a line of vessels running direct to Kauai, also have large interests in this city that would be more or less affected by a diversion of the trade, is decidedly against the supposition that has been raised. Nevertheless it must be admitted that as the commercial demands of districts on the other islands increase and the country becomes more thoroughly populated with a class given to independent and progressive action, the tendency to handle goods directly from the principal sources of supply, the United States, will also increase. It is through no particular love of Honolulu that many of the island customers make it their headquarters, nor is it hatred that leads them to look elsewhere. The proposition is founded on fair competition and strict business principle. Live business men, like women, seek the counter that offers the best bargains. The increased competition with other districts needs cause no alarm—competition is the life of trade—but it does indicate that the practical monopoly of inter-island trade which this city has held will be broken down unless the business community shows itself as wide awake and accommodating as its opponents.

BACTERIA AND CRIME.

While Professor Louis Pasteur by his researches in bacteriology did much to alleviate human suffering, and has added as much if not more than any man of his day to the knowledge of the medical fraternity in battle with disease, he and those who have followed after him have placed a terrible weapon at the disposal of criminals which bids fair to assume serious proportions. Dr. Paul Gibier, in an address before the medicos' legal congress of New York, divided the province of bacteriology into two parts—civil and criminal. Concerning the criminal phase, he said that he was asked by a certain man as to the resultant traces if bacteria were injected into a person. The person was told that certain effects might result from such an injection which could lead to the discovery of the cause. But the doctor afterward found that his questioner was a man of doubtful reputation, and his suspicions were at once directed toward the possibility that would-be murderers might resort to bacteriology with deadly effect. In many instances death could be caused by such injection, and the evidence would be hardly discoverable.

Already desperate men have shown that they are willing to devote infinite labors to the accomplishment of their purposes. Anarchists had pursued elaborate chemical studies. There was no reason for believing that they would not, if they thought it worth their while, devote themselves with all zeal to a study of bacteriology, whereby their designs could be accomplished. In conversation after his lecture the doctor cited a conversation between two anarchists in which the question was asked, "Why use dynamite when one or two bacilli placed in the water supply of a great city will put dynamite to shame?" Granted that all of the anarchists are made up of such men, the conclusions drawn by Dr. Gibier do not seem to be overdrawn.

THE AGE FOR LOVE.

The speculative question which is now discerned in all classes of English society, and which fills the newspapers, is "the proper age for love." Mr. Labouchere makes some cynical remarks in Truth. He says:

"Love may settle down into a reasonable attachment, but, as a rule, it is a mere temporary sensation. People meet each other and after a slight acquaintance feel that they cannot live apart. In nine cases out of ten they find that they get on apart excellently. Even friendship is more of a habit than anything else."

The brilliant Mme. Atam, of Paris, one of the highest authorities in these matters, says, in reply:

"Those who regard love as a sensual passion, and consequently require youth and beauty to inflame it, may be right in deeming love after thirty years ridiculous; but those who hold it superior to mere fleshly charm may experience it at any age just like the other loves."

A clever American woman once said she attended a lecture in a German university town, and the audience was made up of old men and women. The learned professor, after discoursing on the importance of philosophy, suddenly remarked: "After all, my friends, it is only love which rules from the cradle to the grave. It is all there is in life." And the old people responded with a burst of applause. Youth makes the mistake of thinking that it involves only youth and good looks. It does not understand how fat, and bald-headed, and bad-tempered people, in middle life, can have anything to do with it. Those who know something of life know that it has a vast deal to do with the motives of old men in shaping political and commercial affairs.

THE demonstration of the sons of Ireland in Chicago is doubtless of more vital interest to the Chicago police force than any one else. The sentiments expressed at the recent gathering are full of interest as showing how little lapsing years, the balm for many political sores, have served to assuage the fierce hatred of English misrule in Ireland. To wave the red flag of Irish revolution on American soil serves very well as a theory, but past history, and the presence of Charles Mowbray in Chicago, give credence to the supposition that, unless kept carefully furred by police authorities, it will sooner or later prove to be the bloody emblem of an anarchist outbreak. Great Britain will be a much weaker nation than it is today, before the Fenian orators of the United States will strike terror to its heart.
